ing Senator Morton's colleague, a "happy delirium" with regard to what he proposes to show as to the political history of Indiana at the outbreak of the rebellion. If he can and undertake to it that is creditable to him. Mr. McDougal proposes to show that the rebellion was not a political history of Indiana. "We doubt very much whether he will ever come to the defense of the history of his State at the time of which we write. The noble conduct of Governor Morton in that 'time that tried men's souls' has hardly yet been appreciated. When it is remembered that he had arrayed against him a Democratic Legislature, as he himself most felicitously expresses it, 'characterized by the most intense hostility to the Administration and to the prosecution of the war,' and yet, in the face of all the opposing odds, assumed the immense responsibilities he did, it betters the exhibition in a clear light the nerve and patriotism of the man. The attack on the Governor has been served as a fitting opportunity whereby, in self defense, he might remind the people of the direful extremity with which, as a defender of the Union, he was environed. It is, in its effects, one of the most signal illustrations we have ever known of an engineer being a soldier with his own people." Let it be a lesson to others.

EDITORIAL POSTSCRIPT.
Mr. Chase's report upon the prices adopted by the contractors for the work on main sewers is very complete, and does no little credit to the expert.
There are over four thousand men in the Blue Hills who are "dead broke," and four is more than twenty dollars per front. How much they would give to stand in front of Willard's and Jingle, Jingle a half dozen of our pretty early quarters.

The robin has returned, the blue bird twitters merrily on the pine and oak, and Dr. Mary Walker's face wears a radiant smile, and she may be said to be a little better, and taking her tiny hand, "Little Breaches," he would find a No. 3 shoe tickling the lower edge of his roundabout with marked energy.

Boots made of human skins are now on exhibition in New York. The maker claims that he can make boots of any material, and that the leather is a little coarser than calf skin, but quite as durable. This gives a capital chance to a man for speculation. He can sell his hide before his death, with the agreement that it shall not be until he has been gathered into that mysterious bourne.

The Secretary of the Interior has set a good example to Republicans in power. When the ex-Confederate House sent him for the papers in the case of Surveyor General Macken, of Washington Territory, he quietly remarked that he had that man under his eye, and that he would not be so easily deceived as to be deceived by him.

Andrew Jackson's letter to Henry A. Wise was very good, but U. S. Grant's message to the Confederate House is better. Old Hickory and Young Hickory.

Democratic precedents are fearful things to invoke as a rule, but once in a while, as illustrated in the President's message yesterday, they serve a good purpose.

PRESIDENT GRANT'S MESSAGE felt like a bombshell in the ranks of the majority party in the House yesterday. It is not the first time a body of Confederates has been put to flight by him.

CONGRESS is simply a co-ordinate branch of the Government, but not superior either to the Judiciary or the Executive. This is a fact the House will learn if it again attempts to usurp the power of the courts.

The San Francisco Anti-Coolie Club, aided and encouraged by the Young Men's Universal Reform Society, propose to inaugurate their reform by mob law. This is not very virtuous as to the character of the proposed reforms. A cause which is not strong enough to command the popular sentiment in its favor is not of such merit as to justify the invocation of mob law in its favor.

The first Federal interference which these reformers have to expect will probably be enough grape and cannon to disperse their mobs.

IT TAKES out that Andrew Jackson, James Buchanan and all of the earlier and later Democratic Presidents, propose to practice the custom of absenting themselves from the Capital of the nation during the heated term or the recess of Congress. The readers of the NATIONAL REPUBLICAN have been frequently informed of this fact, and now, thanks to the stupidity of the Government of the House, official data is brought to light, to wit: that one of the most important acts of Andrew Jackson's administration—that luminous act in the history of the Democracy—was performed in that Abolition stronghold, Boston.

MANY of our South Carolina readers are indignant because Chamberlain pardoned from the penitentiary a negro outlaw, named Lilly, to give evidence against a worthy citizen, named Yocom. Yocom is an influential Republican, and being opposed to Chamberlain's villainies under the guise of "reform," was so outspoken that Chamberlain, in the course of his second session, took notice of the manner and occasion indicated. Judge Northrop, who presided at Yocom's trial, became indignant at the Governor's effort to blast the fair fame of a good citizen, and ordered the ex-convict Lilly to be taken from the court room. The Columbia Union-Herald, a scurrily penny sheet, owned and edited by Chamberlain, in the course of its unclean task of defending the Governor from the consequences of this monstrous wrong. It mistakes too lightly for wit, and heaps all manner of abuse upon Judge Northrop for declining to allow Lilly to testify in the pending case.

SENATOR MORTON'S DEFENSE.
The Democracy may have ammunition to expend as capital in the approaching campaign. We say may have because a searcher for the truth might in vain search the columns of the Opposition journals for any evidence of political principle. Their entire stock in trade seems to consist in personal abuse of the prospective candidates of the Republican party and in efforts to fasten some approximating disreputable transactions on those whose shoes they are unworthy to unlatch. The most notable illustration of the fecundity with which the Democracy can produce such evidence is the case of the Great War Governor of Indiana. Not content with the most discreditable inventions against the characters of Secretary Bristow and ex-Speaker Blaine, which have been so thoroughly disproved as to render their authors amenable to law, they were not so content as to make them impertinent to a sense of the measures of which they have been guilty, they have ventured upon an attack upon Senator Morton, in connection with a "war record" that was scarcely equalled during the history of the Rebellion. His expellence in the Senate on Wednesday of the charge of a Washington correspondent of the New York World, that he had misappropriated funds obtained from the President for the purpose of equipping troops from the State of Indiana, is not only one of the most masterly vindications of his individual and official acts, but serves to show the terrible odds which, as a patriot, had to contend with. Our readers are, of course, conversant with the speech as published in our columns yesterday, and therefore, unnecessary to more than refer to it. Nevertheless we cannot refrain from what to modify its extradition (treaty or its own extradition laws. In Europe great was the indignation at the attempt to extradite Winslow. There was no law in this case, but the refusal is none the less a gross infraction of the treaty and a shameful breach of public faith.

The course of Secretary Fish in this discreditable business, marked by dignity and decision; and the abrogation of the extradition article of the treaty of 1850, of which the formal ratification was made in the Senate in Washington last evening, is the only conclusion of the matter consistent with national self-respect.

Scandal in Politics.
(From the New York Herald.)
The charges against Blaine, Morton and Bristow are the unpleasant features of the canvass. We have studied these charges carefully, and we are surprised that any of them should have a moment's consideration. Mr. Bristow seems to have done his duty in every case where his honor is not impugned. Mr. Morton, so far from deserving censure for his action as Governor of Indiana, has done the State to the Union in the spirit of a copperhead majority which had withheld upon stopping all such action, deserves lasting respect. The action of the Senate in his honor as one of the brave deeds of the war after the burning questions of this hour are forgotten. To investigate that they were to investigate the battle of Gettysburg and the capture of Richmond. So far as the charges against Mr. Bristow are concerned, we do not see the shadow of evidence upon which to convict him of any dereliction of duty. Mr. Blaine to buy his influence as Speaker and member of Congress. If evidence like this is to be entertained when the honor of our nation is involved there is not a reputation in the country that is safe.
